A Letter from a Universal Friend, perswading all sober Protestants to hearty and sincere Love of one another, &c.

Dearly beloved Brethren,

F neither the boly Scupure, not humane Hiftory, the Reafon of the thing it felf, not the general Observation of all Ages, had thewn us the evil of Difcord and Division, yet our own Experience had been enough to evince us and future generations of the inevitable mischief, destruction, and ruine that attends it ; under the fad and lamentable confequences whereof, we lye grouning at this day. For the ending of which evil at prefent, and preventing the like for the future it were good we wouldcalt our thoughts upon forme common medium, wherein we all might center : And the beter to prepare us for fome such general Proposal, It is necessary that we first confider, What are, and have been, the Caules of our fore Devisions.

And my Friends, the Rife, Seeds Caules, Growth and Entrease thereof feemeth, at least in my understanding, to have it's Original and Continuance from some irregular and undue apprehensions in Religious matters; Not that Religion in its own nature harb any Principle of Difcord or Division in it, po, not at all, but quite the contrary, being full of Peace, Love, Toy, Gentlenels, Forberrance and the like; and to lay truth, is the only thing that qualifier and firs us for Communion with Men, as well as with God. But because of our propentity to erre, in our Understandings, or Practice, or both's This fiveet, lovely, innocent thing of Religion, is, through militake, made nocent to our felves and others; and this militake (dearest friends) is begotten and improved by nothing more than by our departing from those Fundamentals of Religion God himself hath laid. and laying others, formed by our own Imaginations, in the room and Read thereof. For our Lord Jesus ranks all Religion under these two heads, of Loving the Lord our God with all our heart, with all our fonly with all our strength, and with all our mind; and our Neighbour as our selves: And hath assured us, that in these two Commandments all Religion is contained; and upon them hangs all, both the Law and Prophets. The first doth mostly respect our inward Man, or Conscience: The latter, our outward Man, or Conversation; but both together, our whole Man; our inward, and outward, our Soul and Body.

Many mind the first only, which makes them less Humane than they ought; and many respect the last alone, which makes them better Men, than Christians; but sew, you very sew, do reckon themselves equally obliged to both, and according to that Obligation, give obedience to both, walking in all integrity and uprightness towards God and all men.

This Partial Obedience to these two great Fundamentals and Commands of God, is the in-let to all the Divisions and Mileries which befall us : for each Profession confines and reftrains his Religion very much, if not wholly, within the Pale of his own Perfwalion, and too much thinks what he gives to any other, is rather his Charity than his Duty; whereas you fee there is one part of true Religion ought to be as extenfive as the World it felf. Por if we take our Lords definition of our Neighbour, our Neighbonr is not to be understood by the vicinity of our Habitation, not by our relation as Church-members, whea ther of out own or any other Perswation, for the Neighbour we are obliged, both by the Law and Golpel, to love as our felves, stands not related to us as we are Chriftians, but as we sie Men ; as he admirably illustrates, in the instance of the min journeying from Jerufalem.
to Feriche, that fell among Theeves, where the poor Samaritan proves the Neighbout, and exhibits the dury thereof, when both the Prick and Levice had denied it. So that a Stranger in out Lords fence, may be our Neighbour, when he that lives next us, either by Habitation or Protellion, may not : And a poor visitors Heathen (for io the Samaritans Mere judged by the Jewit dray more exactly perform this part of Religion, than the very Teachers and Guides themfelves, of rbare formal Profession. But where there is more than bare form, even the feeming power of Godlinels, how much is the Omiffion of this part of Religion to be lamented, and how unfit are we to ferve the whole Creation by it, that yet know not to extend it to him that ducisocat Whi , doing aighal awa not he wood, and to grige! The

The way therefore to return to Union, and as a confequence to happines, is to return to our duty, which is the way to both: For if the neglecting this grand fundamental, was and is the Cause of our Divisions, the returning to it, will be the healing of them again: for if it be one part of our Religion, to love Men, as Men, though they have no Profession on them; surely we grievously go beside our duty, if we do not love our fellow Professors, as such, though of different perswasions from us, or go to restrain this universal Love to the narrow limits of our own particular Churches, and think there is no duty of Love and service from us to any, but such as are of the same shape, stature and complexion in their spiritual understandings with our selves; the evil of which hath so rent us Protestants, tore us from one another, and so wounded and weakned us, that except we speedily return to a sincere and hearty affection of each other, there is too much reason to fear we may become an easie prey to those that have an equal enmity to us all.

Many Expedients I know have been proposed and practifed to accomplish this Christian Union, as the Meeting, Praying, and Exercifine of differing Perswahons together, that so they might ferment, and grow up into a mutual Love and Understanding of one another, which is very good but cannot reach the end of that duty hear spoken of, for though it may reconcile the differences of those perswasions which are nearest alike one to another, yet it can go no further. But this expedient of the Lords own making comprehends all, year the most remote perswasions, because it extends it felf, not to Opinions or Profeshons, but to men : for whether I am of this, or that, or t'other perimation, I am fill a Man, which is the fingle confideration in this case; fo that the one and only means that would most effectually bring about this, feems to me, to be the thorow and faithful performance of loving one another as Men; for I find by conftant and never-failing observation, that the being loving and kindly affectionate one to another as Men, begets Conventation, and Convertation begets the best understanding of one another ; for that Prejudice that is created by Reports, comes to be removed by Conversation : For when men come to see there's nothing to monstreus and herrible in the Opinions and Practifes of each other, as before they were made to believe there was, they grow up not only to a Humane but to a Christian Friendship for each other. though different in their Judgments and Petivations about Religious matters; Nor is this my observation only, but that which I am per-(waded hath the experience of many others, to telline its truth ; befides: fides the reason it bath in it self: for no man sees by any others so welf as by his own eyes; which if we all had used for our selves, and not trusted to the misrepresentations of others, peradventure there never had been such Discord among Brethren as we have feen.

But whilest I perswade to Love and Unity amongst Christians, though of different Perswasions, I would not be understood to speak a Word for any Principle or Practice destructive to Mankind, as we all know that of the Papists to be, by our too sad experience of their cruel and bloody Massaces, of their burning and destroying whole Cities; a Religion so false and bloody, and so directly contrary to Christianity, that it may rather be called a Confederacy against Mankind, than a Religion.

The Scripture tells us, God opens the ear by Oppression; and it were happy if now at length God should open our ears, and make us to hear and do this great duty, and in order thereunto, that he would give us two things.

First, To such of us as have been Persecutors and Oppressors, Humility, for the great guilt we have been under for Oppressing one another for Conscience sake, that we may thorowly repent of our bitterness, and acknowledge that to have been the great Cause of all the Miferies we fuffer.

And secondly, That he would give to such as have been oppressed, and smitten in the house of their friends for their Conscience sake, not to retain their anger for ever, but to shew a forgiving spirit, by a recadiness to be reconciled, and to enter into a Unity again upon this large and noble Principle of loving their Neighbour as themselves; that the Prejudices of the one, nor the Fears of the other, may not continue but cease, and be no more, nor shut the door of Mercy upon us any longer; for as our failer in this great duty did open the way to all this Rebuke that is come justly upon us, so our return unto this great P.ecept of our Lord, would assuredly hand Freedom and Safety to us.

We can no way so much gratify the Oppressing and Persecuting Spirit of the Church of Rome, as by our Divisions, for our Division is our Weakness, and our Weakness is their Strength. Divide & Impera, hath been their Word in all Ages, but Union hath ever soon put an end to that Empire; For that Government that founds it self rather upon the sins of others, then justice, hath no foundation to support it. Let us act forgiveness therefore on our parts, as a great means to bring about this Union, that as they come forward by Repentance that have Oppressed, so we may meet them with Forgive.

great duty any longer, by retaining our Piques and Offences one agrant duty any longer, by retaining our Piques and Offences one against another: for how can we persuade persecuting Enemies we have a forgiving spirit, and so supple, soften and bring them off from the rage they are on, if they see us unwilling to forgive our returning. Friends.

There being therefore something in all of us, that is capable of Union, and that upon the account of this great Command of God, Let us apply to that, as to the common Center, to which the Lines of every particular Perswasion ought to run, and in which they ought all equally to meet, to wit, The loving our Neighbour as our self: For beginning here, upon the soundation God hath laid, he will carry on our Love and Affections to marvelous Improvements. Let us therefore go in the Lords way; First that that is natural, and after that which is spiritual; as the Apottle speaks in another case, but is also true in this: And let us not lessen the soundations of Love that God himself hath made, by striving for, or after Liberty, to any of our particular perswasions apart, But to keep exactly to this grand Rule of our dury, whesein we are all equally interested in one another, and be zeasous contenders for that, as that only which will reach the intire concernments, not of a party, but the whole.

Having therefore such a bottom, on which we all may stand equally, easily, safely, and securely, let us keep right and saithful unto that, and not crumble away our common security, by the divisions and sub-a divisions of our several Perswasions; and by confining our loves to them alone, content our selves with new and narrow Foundations, which will hold none but our selves, nor we neither, any longer than that by our deviding from this our duty and our common Interest, we have given the ill willers of the whole, a sairer opportunity to sail the souler on those we have deserted, and through their suine to make the eafier way to our own.

I never was over fond of learning ought from persecuting spirits, yet I think Prudence will help us to gather instruction from all things, and a greater and more natural instruction cannot be given us, than to learn to be as extensive in our Love, as they are in their Hatted of us; which if the Lord would please to enable us to do, it would be ablested and sestreshing testimony, that he is appearing for us, in removing that exceeding folly and madness hath been among us, in restoring us to the true use of our Reason and understanding again; and we can no way show the recovery of our Reason and Understanding more more, than by our faithful francing to this Command of God, and by, with and for all that are faithful thereunto, effeeming every ones inflering, that fuffers for it, as our own, as indeed it is: For he that fuffers for, and in purfuance of the common concernment of this glorious Command, wherein I have as great a benefit as the Sufferer, Ir am (if I am under a due and right fense of my duty, and my own Interest) as true a Sufferer as him that suffers; and the stealing away the shoulder from this common burthen, bath been that that hath most encouraged Persecuting Spirits in all times, rendred the load more heavy on the backs of some, and continued it longer upon all.

You see how excellent the Commands of God are, and that in keeping of them there is great reward, even safety and security here: but sest there should be any that mind neither the Lord nor his Commands, I will add for our farther encouragement, That the Fundamental Law of the Land will bear no out in our oebdience to the Fundamental Law of the Gospel; And if we are desended in our Duty, both by Law and Gospel, surely Persecuting Spirits will have enough to do to break through both, and may at the end peradventure see, That no attempts against Gods People shall prosper.

And truly it is our happine's, that the Providence of God hath cast our lot to live in a Land, where the Fundamental Laws thereof, run right with, and just to, the Fundamental Laws of our Religion; and that in standing faithful to the one, we stand faithful, and are justified by the other also; so that none can object against us, that they are incoherent, or we fo in our standing for them.

For I befeech you Friends confider, We hold by one common Tenure all the Humane Interest that we have, and the only Security we have for the holding thereof, is the Fundamental Law; If this Secucirity be violated upon any one, our Lives, Liberties and Properties are Invaded by that violation, as well as his to whom the violation is done; For he had the same Fence to secure his Freedom as we, and that sence being broken, we have no more security than him: Our keeping up therefore this Fundamental Law, as the Fence or Bank against the Sea, is the alone and only way to preserve the whole; for otherwise, through the Breach thereof, my Right, though seeming more remote will be destroyed as well as his that lyeth next it, and I cannot keep up this Fence, but by desending the right of him that is violated as my own, and my desending his Right as my own, is my Loving my Neighbour as my self.

And as it was good for us that we had fuch forefathees, as laid for if they could, experience tells, that long sgo we might have been made, infless of free born English men, as staves in Tarket.

Find smerie good we would value prize, and be so magicus of these Find smerials, that have preserved our Lives, substrates and Properties to us, as we may delive them entire to our Posservies, as that which is their only Security of their Earthly All. For, Thurst the strong man armed, that keeperboot only the bonse and goods, but the good man bimself, and all be bath from spelling. For our Fundamental Laws are not only Laws themselves, but the Rule and Standard of all sunge Laws, and that which is the Judge of Laws, in order to the securing our Liberties and Freedoms, or elle where were our Foundation? For if an Act of Parliament could pull it up, it had never thin to this day. That this is clear, you may see in the Case of Dudley and Employ.

For Dudley and Employ had an Act of Parliament to fuffifie their proceedings, yet could not that Act of Parliament justifie either them, or it self; for that being made, as this Act against Communicles, directly against our Fundamental Laws, and our English Rights, by impowing Dudly and Employ, as this Act doth the Justices of Peace, to Examine and determine Englishmen without Legal Process and Judgment of their Peers, which is one of our great Fundamentals; they not only Condemned Dudley and Employ, but the Act it self as Hiegal; and good Reason, for how otherwise could Dudley and Employ eich have been banged, since they had a Law of King, Lords and Commons to defend them, unless the Law it self (pardon the manner of speaking) had been silegal?

And how could a Law of King, Lords and Commons be Illegal, if there were not a Measure and Standard of the very Laws themselves, that made and judged it so? and what Standard could that be, could so judge it, but our Fundamentals against which it was made?

But that I may not feem to beg to Great a Question, upon which no less than all we have as English-men depends; I will give you one clear Proof, which may very well ferve for many, for it is the acknowledgment of King, Lords and People, upon the very point I am upon, and in that very sence I urge it, that you may see that this is no Novelty, but was the declated Opinion of all England, for above four hundred years ago (which at that time, as the bord Cooke, and others, was but in affirmance of our then most Antient Fundamental Laws) and it is the Anathema administred in the great Hall at Westminster, at the Restoring and Confirmation of Magna Charge, the third of Mag

the Year of our Land says, King, Lords and People being prefent, Confunctions, that phin found Words, not subject to mississes or doubtings. By which you see what I askened a First that our Fundamentally me the Statistical and Touchstone of all Laws. Secondly, That the Legislative Power it self is sited up, under a deadlah Corre, from making any Statute, or Law against them. Thirdly, If they should adventure to do it, the People are obliged by the same Curse to disobey the Laws they make, and to give obedience to Mayte of horse, and the People in additionable to the property of the People are obliged by the same Curse of horse, and the people are obliged by the same Curse of horse, and the people of an impossibility of Nay, to destroy themselves, it and Law could be made by any whomsever to Null it.

Hereby you may fee the Value out Ancefors put upon out Erelah Liberty, how jealous they were of it; That for fear we should be deprived of the true enjoyment thereof, they would not truft their very Parliaments, no, not under fo folemp an Obligation, with the keening of them; any further forth, than, if they kept them not it should be Lawful for the People to disobey their Laws, and tather choose to make every individual person thus the Judge of his Liberty then so lodge it in the absolute power of any to dispoyl them of it . Knowing that that Liberty could but bring upon their Posterity little turnults and confusions for a feafon; but the other would imbondage, enflave, and deftroy thein forever. Keep we therefore to them as to the Common Sefety, and let them that pun upon us by virtue of any Law made in in prejudice of them, confider with themselves, though, as Employ and Didley they may flatter for a time, our Fundamental Laws will be too frieng for them at laft; For it would nouples any perion to bring an Inflancerof any men fout of Warrefpecially) that ever brake our Fondamental Laws, but that first or last it brake his Neck, for the breach be mide upon them; satini berfinimbe sandred, saller ti bee

On the contrary, we read nothing more frequent in our English An-mile: then the cutting of Offenders for but endervouring to subvere them ; and how could that be in all Ages; unlefs we have fome Fundamental Laws? That it it it the highest Treason in any to fo much as but endeavour to fubvert ; and how foon would shafe: Foundations he deftroved were it in the power of any to inhvert theme and what need would there be of such offigence in allogonorations, to preferve them from Subverfron, if the Publick West, and Liberty of the whole Were not concerned in theth ? Where, by the ways you may observe how excellently the English Law words the Charge of High Freaton in this Cafe : in putting it in thefe Tearms, Endparenning to Subvert them : (For there is no fuch thing in Nature, as the Real Subversion of them :) For our Fundamentals were not mide by our Representan lives, but by the People themselves y and our Representatives themfelves limited by them ; which to were good that Partiements as wett (as People would objerve, and be faithful tout Bor no Deswaring Power can Null what their Primetive Power hich Establishes to mamore

And, as if our forefathers thought they could never take too much care to deliver these Laws fasely down to their Successors at Their although all persons concerned in the executive part of the Law, are so sensity and firstly sworn to its due Observance, and all persons that shall make any Laws contrary to our Fundamental laws, or any that shall yield Obedience of Observe them being mide, hear ily Cursed yet, as if they thought they could never too sufficiently Source them to us, do surther appoint and order to the chartest before the delivered in every Sheriffe of England, to be Read four closes to the Tran, to fore the People in the full County; And likewife to all Cathelinso there is to remain to be Read to the People twice every Tran. So that if we have any regard to our own Safety, or the Security and Happiness of Posterity are current on have the same tender care and effects thereof as they had.

The Law of England abhorrests nothing more than the Setting w Denying of Delaying of Justice and Right, and as much as possible removes all lyablepels to any of these; not leaving any whing of Life. Liberty, of Property to the Bretts of Judge or Justicess dure all to be determined by the Judgment of our Peers or Bauti, lagainst whoman all Cales there are Legal Exceptions, and if wronged there lyeth in Attaint; and whatever Practice of Practices, though never for often, or of long continuance, may have made Encroachments, and wide tions beterpoon, and to are called Presidents, and urged for Law; We say with the Lord Chief Justice Britished, and urged for Law; We have made to the Lord Chief Justice Britished, and urged for Law; We have made to the law of the portion of the Presidents, and the law of the presidents.

For that is the Standard to try whether they be right or counterfeit, and all such being weighed in the Ballance of our Fundamental Laws, will be found too Light.

Nor is their Objection against Fundamentals, that urge its Nality from the Disuse thereof, of any more Reason, than if I thould plead the payment of a Bond from the forbeatance of my Creditor. We must look therefore to the Fundamental Laws of the Land, as to the Inheritance our Fathers left us, without which all our other Inheritance.

The Magistrares therefore ought to look, not so much whether they at Regularly according to the late Act against Conventicles, as whether the Act it felf be Regular and according to the Fundamental Laws, one of which exprelly faith, Wecannot be Diffeiles of our Liberties Properties, or any otherwise injured or bestropen, but by the Lawful Indgement of our Beers, Wherefore let all Mayors, Juffices, Con-Hables, Overfeers, Churchwardens, and all other Officers that (hall' bull or hale away any part of our Liberties, Goods, or Properties by virtue of this A&, that bath no virtue in it, know (not by way of . shreat, but admonition) that though we are willing to forgive them as Christians, vet as Englifb-men we cannot forgive them : Nor will it be admitted for any Pleasthat they thould have been fined themfelvest for the very Fines themselves in this Act, are as irregular as the Act it felf : And to faverust, all Laws that have need of fuch Fines and Mates ennexed unto them, do carry in their very Front & Sufpition they are falle and differing from our Fundamentals. For good Laws. and fuch as seree with our Foundations, carry fuch Self-evidence and Conviction of the Publick utility of the whole, that they need not the Sput of any Penalty to quicken the Execution of them.

Now to conclude, It doth behave us to lay afide our little Differences and agreein fome common Medium, & what can be found more efsectually leading to this end, than that of our Natural and Fundamental Rights; contained in Magna Charta, and other Monuments and Records of our Liberties, wherein every person hath an equal Interest, the one as the other? So that though we cannot accord in all things as Christians, yet we may agreeus men; and our agreement as Men will be a fair Step towards our accord as Christians. For he sees but little that sees not that our breach of Humanity, is one great cause of the breach of Christianity, amongst us: And as an incentive hereto permit me to add, That if I have my Liberty as an English-man, I wish give any one feave to take away my Liberty as a Christian if he can because it is an utter impossibility. For if I have the Freedom of my Person to go where I will, and do what I will, so it be not against the Publick Peace, nor to the Injury of others (which is the Liberty of an Englishman) I can hear, and joyn in Worship with whom, and where, and when I will. The enjoyment therefore of our Emplife Rights, is the broadeft, best and fafest way to fecure our Christian Rights, whereas if we are deprived of those, we cannot enjoy the freedom of thefe.

Since therefore we have so bleffed a Medium, as will secure the Intereft of our inward, as well as our ontward man, of our Chriftian, as well as our English Rights, and that to every one as well as to our felves : and thereby making us truly capable of fulfilling the great and glorious Law of God of loving our Neighbours as our felves.

Let us be found (my deareft Friends of all Perswafions) feithful thereunto, by helping, succouring and affifting every one that shall fuffer for this Common Caufe, either in their Perfons or Properties, as those that suffer equally for our lakes as their own. And fince we have the Fundamental Laws of God, and of the Land on our fide, Let us conftantly adhere thereunto, and leave the Iffue, Success and Evene thereof to the Lord; And Let the Roman and Antichriftian foirit know. that unless they are stronger than him, they can never prevail, but must lve down in forsow with all their fellows that have gone before them, under the difmal wo of them that frive with their Maker die to
